Local stories of sustainability in action

As we witness time and again the lack of progress on international environmental and peace agreements, it becomes evident that the work for a clean environment and sustainable peace requires a grassroots approach – sustainability built from the ground up. Now, more than ever it is time to come together to advocate for feminist alternatives.

Join us for the first episode of our webinar series focused on gender, peace and the environment. During the webinar, WILPF activists whose work was featured in the zine Down the Green
Feminist Road will share the critical, creative and innovative approaches they are putting forward to sustain the livelihoods of their communities and raise awareness of environmental degradation. Together we will discuss how militarism and patriarchal values are standing in the way of environmental justice, and present alternative perspectives to the environmental crisis. Only together, we can make a difference — so make sure to join us!
